Six-figure theft at postal facility

By David Weller

More than $100,000 was stolen from the West Sacramento regional postal center on Industrial Blvd. on June 25. Augustine Ruiz, a Postal Service corporate relations spokesman, said Tuesday the amount of money missing is "close to $100,000." A postal inspector estimated last week that it may be as high as $500,000.

Although two employees were scheduled to work that day in the caged registry room where the money was being stored, they were given the day off to attend a company picnic.

"Even though there may not have been anyone inside the cage, there are supervisors all over the plant floor. There were people who had responsibility for that area," said Ruiz.

Every day receipts from about 100 northern California post offices are shipped to the West Sacramento location for processing before being taken to the bank in an armored car.

Postal Inspector Jim Hasse told a Sacramento Bee reporter that the amount of money in the registry on June 25 was unusually high because it contained the previous day's receipts.

The theft occurred between the hours of 6:30 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. while the room was not staffed. The money was reported missing by an employee at 6:45 p.m.

The postal service's regional postal facility, on Industrial Blvd. near Enterprise

Hasse theorized that the thief had inside information because an alarmed door was the only means of escape.

A postal employee reported seeing a man loitering around the loading docks for several hours that day. He reportedly was seen walking toward the registry at 6:30 p.m.

He is described as a white male, 55 to 60 years old, with short, light-colored hair. He stands 5 feet 4 inches, and weighs 130 pounds. When last seen he was wearing jeans and a gray short sleeved shirt.

17-year old dies in two-car accident

By Steve Marschke

A 17-year old West Sacramento girl died early Monday morning after losing control of her car on Jefferson Blvd. and colliding with an oncoming vehicle.

Erica Crowell, a West Sacramento resident, was pronounced dead on the scene after her 1985 Honda Prelude crossed lanes and was struck by a pickup truck driven by Harold Horner, 55. Horner is hospitalized for a broken jaw and chest injuries.

The accident occurred in Southport, about half-way between Jefferson's intersections with Devon and with South River Road, said Lt. Russ Thomas of the West Sacramento Police Department. It was the third fatal accident on Jefferson Blvd. in Southport in less than a year.

Each of the two previous fatal accidents claimed three lives.

"She was driving southbound," said Lt. Thomas. "She was well past the bridge. A man named Harold Horner, about 55 years old, was coming northbound on Jefferson in a 1962 pickup. The preliminary investigation indicates that for some unknown reason, Erica lost control of her vehicle and it crossed over into the oncoming lane, and the vehicles collided."

Thomas said that Crowell's car spun in the road before it was struck, and that the oncoming pickup truck then struck her car on the driver's side.

The two-lane road at that point is "absolutely straight," he added. The road, a state highway, has a posted speed limit of 45 m.p.h., although many vehicles go faster.

Thomas added that two young males stopped after the accident and could be witnesses, but left the scene without leaving their names or phone numbers. The pair recognized that Crowell was dead and helped comfort Horner until medical aid arrived. Thomas asked that they contact him or Officer Dan Ruden at 372-2461 so that police may interview them about what they saw.

Jefferson Blvd. remained closed for about five hours following the accident, with traffic diverted to South River Road.

Both drivers involved in the accident were alone in their vehicles. Toxicology reports which might indicate whether either was under the influence of alcohol or other drugs are not yet complete.

Thomas stressed that all the evidence has not yet been examined and it is not safe to place blame for the accident.

Widening and other improvements to Jefferson Blvd. are planned as a joint West Sacramento/Caltrans project in several years. Following a three-car fatality earlier this year, the West Sacramento City Council asked Caltrans to make interim improvements to the road to improve safety in the nearer future.

Another storm for the Port:

Sacto grand jury criticizes Port's operations and policies, but director takes exception

By David Weller

The Sacramento County Grand Jury issued a report June 30 criticizing the Port of Sacramento on several of its managerial and oversight procedures.

The Jury's investigation of the port came in response to a complaint filed by Port Commissioner Victoria Bingham early last year.

Bingham did not make her letter of complaint public, but the Jury's final report described the complaint as charging that port district operations "suffered from poor employee morale, poor maintenance and lax and inefficient management practices."

The Jury reported that the Port Commission meetings failed to conform to the traditional format for public meetings as required by the Brown Act.

According to the report, the meetings included reports that were not included in the public meeting, commissioners were provided with inadequate information, and the meeting minutes "failed to provide the year-to-date or current financial status of the Port."

Port Director John Sulpizio

It was unclear whether the meetings in question included a financial analysis. According to Port Commission John Sulpizio, the financial status of the port is reported to the commission in a public meeting once a month.

The report also criticized port management for not having a set personnel policy for administrative staff and for a lack of budgetary control.

"Budgetary control is lax at best. For instance, travel by management staff is not controlled by the commission, and the district pays for staff meals during working hours and for membership in service organizations," the report said.

Finally the report criticized the commissioners for not taking a strong enough role in guiding port district policy.

"The commissioners, as a group, do not play a significant role in setting policy for the district. While they are not provided sufficient information to play a strong policy role, there appears to be a lack of assertiveness by commissioners to demand the information and provide direction to the staff.

"Lack of understanding by individual commissioners of Port operations and import/export activities was apparent," the report said.

While Sulpizio was reluctant to respond point for point to the Grand Jury's criticism in the newspaper, he did say that management staff will respond to Grand Jury by the September 30 deadline.

He did say, however, that the report is "at best superficial and not indicative of the current set of policies."

The port district has experience changes in three key positions during the course of the year. Sulpizio, who had been assistant director for several years, took over the director's position from Mike Vernon in January.

'Cheaper!' returns:

Backers of Southport discount store are back with new traffic study

By Steve Marschke

Proponents of a "Cheaper!" discount grocery store and gas station, which they hope to build in West Sacramento's Southport neighborhood at the southern intersection of Jefferson Blvd. and Linden Rd., will be back in front of the West Sacramento City Council tonight (July 12, 7 p.m.).

The council will probably send the matter back for planning commission review to examine a new traffic study sponsored by the store's owner, The Customer Company.

The planning commission had approved a permit for the store in November, but that decision was reversed by the council in January. Cheaper! officials were told that they would have to prove their store will not increase car traffic on Jefferson Blvd. and across the Jefferson Blvd. bridge in order to win the right to build.

The city currently has a development moratorium in place until a second barge canal crossing is built to supplement the Jefferson bridge.

Cheaper! has obtained the services of Omni-Means for a new traffic study, showing that "peak hour vehicle traffic would not increase as a result of project traffic."

But Mayor Cindy Tuttle said that there may be a problem of perceived bias in that study, since The Customer Company hired Omni-Means directly, "instead of following city policy on hiring consultants."

The firm should have been hired by and responsible to West Sacramento, she said, with the costs being reimbursed by The Customer Company.

"There could be a question as to the impartiality of that particular study, since Cheaper! hired them directly," she commented.

City staff has suggested that the city might have to hire a third party to review the study and screen it for bias.

Bike lane issue returns to city council tonight

By Steve Marschke

The controversial issue of new bicycle lanes on West Capitol Ave. will return for city council debate tonight.

Following criticisms by some West Capitol Ave. business people that eliminating parking along the avenue in order to make room for the lanes will hurt local businesses, the council previously rejected the proposal and asked for alternatives.

The new city staff report gives only two alternatives that it can recommend -- either going ahead with the original project, or skipping the lanes altogether. The staff report also outlines "partial" bike lane options and detours such as placing the lanes on Merkley Ave., but cites safety concerns with these options and the opinion that cyclists will ignore any bike lanes that forces them to take a detour from their most direct route.

Councilman Roland Hensley asked for tonight's reconsideration of the bike lane issue.

Mayor Cindy Tuttle said Tuesday that she wasn't sure the staff report met the council's request for more alternatives on the bike lane issue.

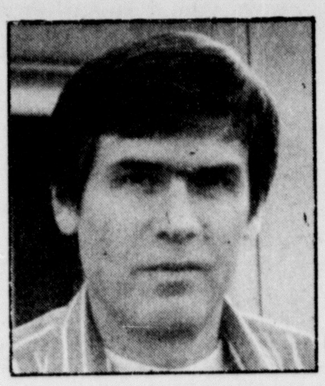
"The only alternative they're giving us is no project or the one they brought forward last time," she said. "I thought council direction was pretty clear, to look at the alternatives."

The city has received state funding commitments to pay 90 percent of the costs of the bike lane project to a maximum of $56,250.

Frank Wooters, president of the West Sacramento Downtown Association, wrote in protest that "we do not feel that adding five foot bike lanes on each side of the street as well as prohibiting parking along the route will do a thing for the business climate of West Sacramento."

Newspaper mugshots & wisdom from the Unabomber

My Back Pages



By Daryl Fisher

A friend of mine recently told me that he liked one of my columns and after I humbly lowered my eyes and smiled modestly, I thanked him. "You know," he added with apparent sincerity, "if I was you, I'd mail the Sacramento Bee a few of your columns and see if they would print them."

"Really?" I said, having often wondered myself why someone high up at the Bee hadn't long ago beaten down the door of the News-Ledger and demanded that Steve Marschke immediately sign over the rights to my column.

"The columns I read in the Bee aren't all that hot," continued my friend. "Hell, the stuff you write is as good as most of that crap."

"Thanks," I replied, pretty sure he had meant to give me another compliment.

"In fact, the only column me and my friends read all the time in the Bee is that one by Diana Griego Erwin -- and that's only because we like her picture."

"Is that right?" I said, having never seen a photograph of Ms. Erwin.

"She is one hot looking babe," my friend assured me with a big grin.

"If I was you," I warned my friend, "I wouldn't place too much confidence in those pictures of columnists that newspapers run."

"Why is that?"

"Well," I said, "I once knew a lady columnist who had to be 50 if she was a day, and her newspaper always ran a photograph of her that was taken when she was 29."

"You're kidding?" asked my shocked friend. "Newspapers really do that?"

"I'm afraid so. Haven't you ever noticed that Ann Landers and Abigail Van Buren have looked the same for about 20 years?"

"So, what are you saying," said my suddenly distraught friend, "that Diana Griego Erwin isn't really as young and gorgeous as she is in that picture of her on page two of the Bee?"

Sensing that I had unintentionally dropped a potential bombshell on my friend, I put my arm around his shoulder and quickly tried to change the subject a bit. "By the way," I asked, "what do you think of that photo the News-Ledger always runs of me?"

"Well," said my friend with a mixture of anger and deep felt conviction, "you sure ain't no Diana Griego Erwin!"

Later that evening, in an effort to find out who Diana Griego Erwin was, I dug around in my newspaper recycling bin until I came across a column by her entitled, "Does Technology ease our lives or alienate us?" Nice picture, alright, I whispered to myself as I began to read.

The theme of the column turned out to be that even though the Unabomber is human garbage (having killed three and injured 22 since 1978), "His argument that the impact of economic and technological changes in our society has been largely negative, should be examined seriously." A hard working lady Ms. Erwin quoted in the article said, "I've accrued all this stuff and work all these hours because something in all the messages society sends out told me I should. But am I happy? Is my life filled with joy? No, I wouldn't call it joy. Plus I haven't met anyone because I'm so busy working."

Wow, I thought to myself, starting to squirm in my chair, Diana Griego Erwin, apparently one of the Sacramento Bee's most respected columnists, really believes that we can all learn something new and profound from an idiot like the Unabomber. "He is a dangerous and frightening killer," Ms. Erwin concluded, "but an argument can be made that his frustrations with modern life are in exaggerated sense our own." Baloney! For more centuries than I care to count, all anyone has ever had to do to be reminded that life (with or without technology) is about meaningful connections with other human beings, was pick up a good book. Shakespeare, Dostoyevsky, D.H. Lawrence, Camus, almost anyone will do. And I think I'm going to scream the next time someone even so much as suggests that there is anything interesting or note-worthy in the rambling thoughts of the cruel and cowardly.

A few days later, I ran into my friend and told him that not only had I read one of Diana Griego Erwin's columns, but I had also done a little research on my own and discovered that Ms. Erwin is indeed as youthful and pretty as her picture in the Sacramento Bee would lead one to believe.

"Thank God," said my friend, very much relieved. "And by the way," he asked, "are you going to take my advice and send some of your columns over to the Bee and see if they will print them?"

"No, I don't think so," I said, "but just in case some editor from a big newspaper ever does read one of my columns, I'm definitely going to update my photo -- and I think I'll also start calling myself Daryl James Fisher."

NOTE: By the way, if the Unabomber (who has long been suspected of living in Northern California) happens to read this, and is currently residing in a motel room on West Capitol Avenue as I hear some people suspect, please mail my package to the News-Ledger in care of Steve Marschke.

Panhandler sighting calls for evasive action, warp six. . .

By T.J. Smoot

It was a dark and stormy night. Well...ok, it wasn't stormy, but it was dark. I realized at 10:38 p.m. that I needed to gas up the van for the Mrs. Smoot's errands the next day. So I dragged myself off the couch and away from the tube. Since it was the end of the month, I shuffled to the change basket to find enough silver alloy coin for the gas station. Pennies were out. I wasn't THAT desperate.

I sorted through some change and soon had a handful of nook nickels, desk dimes and couch quarters, some four dollars total. Knowing that I was on an important mission fraught with diverse dangers, I buttoned up my raincoat, adjusted my fedora, kissed Mrs. S. goodbye and said, "We'll always have West Sacramento" and chinked out to the van. Now the next decision was WHERE to get gas. I had given up on the nearest station since it carries a panhandler coefficient of .75. Wanting to avoid entrepreneurs approaching me, "locking phasers on target and falling into attack mode Delta," I thought I'd try the station down the street on West Capitol instead. Their coefficient was only .30.

Approaching from the West with the moon at my back, I dropped out of warp speed and adjusted for windshear factors. Blinkers, check. Braking slightly, check. I surveyed the runway for FAFM (Folks Asking For Money), and spotted a potential candidate warming the telephone booth at the corner of the lot. This noted, I banked into the island farthest away from him and plopped out of my vehicle with a "chink chink." I mentally stopped, suddenly alarmed that I was a potential noisy target. In spite of this, I determinedly made my way up to the cashier. Since it was HRRH (high risk robbery hours), the clerk was locked away behind glass inside the store. I soon discovered I was to place my money in a tray that was pushed out, waiting for me.

I scooped the coins up out of my front pocket, dumped them in the stainless steel tray with a musical "brannnnnnng!," and shoved the tray inside for her to count. There! The money was inside, and soon I would get my gas. This clerk was incredibly agile with handling the change. Without skipping a beat she put her long, curved, ruby red fingernails to work and picked up the coins like a parrot does sunflower seeds. I watched her painted lips move silently as she counted. Then I looked down at the neat stacks of coins. This cycle went on for a few moments until it ended with me staring at her lips, still moving and still counting, or so I thought. We locked eyes. Her lips still moved a little. "She must still be counting in her head," I thought, vacantly blinking. Finally, after an awkward second or two she said, glaring like only a tired clerk can, "Is that ALL?" I was caught off guard. "Uh...Yes." I eeped out. "That'll be $4.35 on pump 6," she flatly stated.

I hurried back to the van and quickly hooked up the pump, noting the FAFM. I practiced my lines for that inevitable moment: "No, actually I don't have any spare change. (shrug shoulders) You see, this month had five weekends in it, and we had to go out of town. We had more expenses than we anticipated, so I had to scrape and skimp just to get $4.35 for gas. I could show you my budget book if that would help you understand. I will try harder next month." (Smile apologetically) I prepared my arsenal with this irrefutable answer which, like a photon torpedo, is uncomfortable to use but available if needed.

I put on my best "don't bother me, I had a no-spare-change-month" look, and hoped the pump would hurry up. The man near the phone booth wandered closer. I tensed up. The gas was done. Proud that my FAFM avoidance tactics worked, I hopped in the driver's seat, locked the door, and zipped away at warp six.

Rosilynne Barbosa placed second in sparring, while her classmate Alicia Mosher placed second in form and third in sparring for 13 and 14-year-old girls Black Belt Division and Taren Ogata (1994 World Champion) placed first in forms for nine and ten-year-old girls Black Belt Division. Fabian Melendez took second place sparring for 13 and 14-year-old Boys Black Belt Division. Brandon Mosher placed third in sparring for nine and ten-year-old boy Black Belt Division. Finally, Al Williams placed second in Mens Second Degree Black Belt Division.

All the students are members of Barbosa's Karate in West Sacramento. The which has recently praised as one of the country's first Taekwondo training centers. Luis Barbosa, owner, said, "This would not be possible without the help and dedication of the following persons: James and Pam Mosher; Allen and Carol Elliott Pedro and Rosalia Melendez; Layne and Lori Ogata; Fred, Laura and Rosilynne Barbosa; Vincent and Lorene Moreno; Eric Tjai; Al Williams; Victoria Ramirez; Fernando Jaime; Greg Hampton; Jay Newton; Master Mike Ajay; and Grand Master H.U. Lee. To you and the community of Sacramento I give my deepest thanks."

Barbosa invites parents to bring their children to the school and give Karate a try. "Taekwondo teaches children to listen, pay attention, follow directions and participate in class and in life," Barbosa continued, "and is also great fun for the kids and their parents."

The baseball season is at the All-Star break and the Giants (33-36) trail the first place Colorado Rockies by six games, while the A's (36-35) are four games behind the first place Angels and Rangers in the Western Division.

Barry Bonds, the leading NL vote-getter, was the only Giants player selected to the All-Star game.

The A's had two players selected to the All-Star classic. Mark McGwire was chosen to play but will miss the game because he suffered a concussion after being beaned in the head last week by Blue Jays pitcher David Cone. The other A's All Star was pitcher Steve Ontiveros, who has a record of 8-3 with an ERA of 3.09.

The 49ers are ready to start training camp on Sunday, July 16 at Rocklin. The 49ers have signed defensive end Alfred Williams to a one-year contract that could be worth as much as $1.2 million. The Bengals' first round pick in 1991, he led the team last season with 9 1/2 sacks, which was more than any 49ers last year!

Former USC star Ricky Ervins, who led the Redskins in rushing last season, is expected to sign a one year contract and compete for Ricky Watters vacant running back position.

The Oakland Raiders are charging $250 (end zone) to $4,000) (50 yard line) per seat for the right to buy season tickets. The price for the "personal seat licenses" will vary by location, but then you have to pay for the ten home game tickets, which will average $50!

The Raiders training camp opens July 21 in El Segundo (L.A. area) because a local facility is not ready. That means the Raiders will travel for all 16 games this season!!

The Raiders will play their Aug. 25 preseason game against the New England Patriots at Stanford Stadium because the A's have a home game that day.

The Sacramento Knights (6-0) remain undefeated this season, beating Las Vegas and San Jose last weekend. The Knights have the top ranked goalie in the league with Mike Dowler. Dowler has 88 saves and has allowed only 29 goals for a 4.77 average in six games. Forward Jon Perry is tied for third in the league offensive statistics with eight assists and eight goals.

The Knights play at home next Sunday at 6:00 p.m. against the Portland Pride. Lots of fast action and plenty of great seats are available.

See ya next week!!

News-Ledger Editorial

West Cap bike lanes are best bet for the street's future

The right answer on the bike lane question is simply "yes" to the original plan, and councilman Roland Hensley is to be commended for asking that the West Sacramento City Council revisit this hornet's nest tonight.

In an ideal world, the council could make everyone happy with its decision on this overblown issue. But this is not, of course, an ideal world, and not everyone is going to be happy.

So the issue becomes one of safety and long-term business climate.

Putting the lanes on side streets such as Evergreen, Merkley or Sacramento Ave. won't fly. Cyclists won't use them (they represent a detour), and narrow streets through questionable areas of these streets are certainly no safer to pedal than West Capitol.

On the other hand, putting new lanes on West Capitol will improve safety for those already cycling there, and will improve bicycle circulation and the local business climate as the avenue (ever-so-slowly) revitalizes. It will be good for local business in the long run, even if a handful of businesses face the loss of on-street parking for truck drivers and other patrons.

Also, the no-parking zones which will come with the new bike lanes will give police one more weapon against prostitution. By being able to approach and cite any "john" who pulls up to the curb to talk to a prostitute, police will force local streetwalkers to make do with less convenient working arrangements.

This is one more way of putting the squeeze on West Sacramento's most notorious industry. And this, too, will be good for the business district in the long run.

Letters to the Editor

Jones responds

I am writing in response to your June 28, 1995 article, "Low Income Housing Advocate David Jones Heads to Nation's Capitol for a Year," to correct several inaccurate statements and suggestions made in the article.

First, I was not interviewed for the article before it was written. While the author called me, I was unable to speak with him at that time. Any impression raised in the article to the contrary is not correct.

Second, there is no agreement nor has there ever been any agreement which states that I have to "sign off on any actions the city takes which effects the housing stock in the city," nor have I ever requested or been offered such an agreement. The duly elected city council of the City of West Sacramento is the sovereign decision making body for the city. The city council would never delegate its lawful exercise of authority to a third party, nor should it. The author's suggestion to the contrary is simply inaccurate.

Third, be assured that Legal Services of Northern California will continue to provide quality legal representation to poor households in Yolo County, including West Sacramento, during my appointment in Washington. LSNC employs nearly thirty attorneys of the highest caliber, and the work we have done on behalf of low-income persons who need affordable housing in this county will continue unabated.

DAVID E. JONES
Attorney at Law
Legal Services of Northern California

Editor's note: Mr. Jones refers to a June 28 News-Ledger article, and not to last week's article in which he was interviewed.

The June 28 article contained no direct quotes from Mr. Jones, although it did refer to statements he had in the past; we regret any confusion this may have caused over whether he was interviewed for the article.

Last week we printed a correction with regards to his second point -- our mistake in printing that the city and Legal Services had some kind of agreement to consult. That apology stands.

The News-Ledger did not mean to take a position on his third concern, but merely to raise the issue.

Thanks from officer

On June 24, 1995, a fundraiser was held in order to help with the significant legal costs I was facing regarding my court case. I would like to thank all those who helped me.

There were dozens of people, some who I don't even know, who worked countless hours to put this fundraiser on. I will never be able to adequately repay these people for their kindness. To all the wonderful people who purchased tickets, donated precious funds; to the businesses that supported the fundraiser with door prizes, and especially to everyone who displayed blue ribbons in support of the police, you have my sincerest thanks. Without your help, my wife and my two young children and I would have been financially devastated.

I only hope that as I return to work at the police department, I can demonstrate my appreciation by offering the best service possible to our community.

DONALD DONOHO
West Sacramento Police Officer

Dishonest crusaders

As the saying goes, history repeats itself. Back in the mid-1920s, in an interview for an article in Cosmopolitan magazine, one of the prime moves that put across prohibition in the U.S. in 1920 admitted that he had to do a lot of lying and bribing in order to have prohibition enacted.

The exact same thing is happening now. The police and groups that deal with alcohol are totally dishonest. In a recent issue of Yolo Unite, there is a bar graph that is supposed to represent consumption by years but the graph is far steeper than the data it represents. I have drawn lines that show how the bars should go. There are a number of books with such titles as "How to Lie With Statistics" which show how the liars that came up with this graph operate.

Although I have never smoked and I rarely drink, I am concerned with the fact that police and other groups that deal with alcohol are totally dishonest and that a lot of innocent people end up getting burned in the process.

Port not worth it

It was interesting to read about the expected Port of Sacramento operating loss for the year in last week's News-Ledger.

What was even more interesting was the cause of the loss. A drop in shipments of wood chips, fertilizer, wheat, logs and rice. These are the various interests we have been subsidizing with our tax money over the last 20 years and the Port would like us to subsidize for the next 20 years.

With the first $10.000.000 they would deepen the channel. Then another $25,000,000 to upgrade the facilities and equipment. Without a doubt, by that time the turning basin would be too small, the tug boats would be too small. I could go on and on and on. And so would the Port like to go on and on and on. Using taxpayers money.

Also in last week's News-Ledger we had an editorial that pretty much said it as it is. Let's look at the broad picture and the best possible use of the Port and its real estate. Bear in mind this is all publicly owned property. Is the present program (read that Port) working? Obviously not. Should it be fixed? I do not believe it can be fixed or it would not be in the shape its in.

Next, what to do? There are any number of things. First, we do not need the Port or the paper plant. The West Sacramento City Council, as are the other three governing bodies, are made up of very intelligent people. I am sure they can get their heads together and come up with something a lot better. As an example, think of what a nice marina and park would look like for starters.

A lot less money, a lot less truck and rail traffic, a lot less dust, dirt and noise. Something the people could and would use and enjoy. And more important. Support. Down with the Port and paper plant. Up with the people. Come on taxpayers, let's all speak up. Loud and clear.

Bus shelters

(How's this for a "Dear Daryl" question?): Why does our Washington Unified School District continue to (apparently) oppose restoring bus stops at 930 Westacre Road? When they were taken out well over a decade ago, W.U.S.D.'s parking lot was maybe one-half full on a normal day. Operations have been expanded at W.U.S.D. that have caused overcrowding of the parking lot during said normal days.

Taking out that bus stop created one of the longest voids in YoloBus' service in West Sacramento. Many first-time riders of the #40 YoloBus making the right turn off West Capitol Avenue onto Westacre Road become very upset when such a logical stop site is passed by. They run to the front of the bus, shouting at the bus driver -- blaming him and calling names! (Makes for real pleasant riding and driving of bus, huh?) Is there some kind of clause in the agreement between the W.U.S.D. board and the W.U.S.D. bus drivers preventing re-establishing of said bus stops?

To maintain the status quo is to also continue the barrier for non-drivers that discourages employment, everyday visits and night school attendance at Yolo High, sometimes for Sacramento City College credits. Ask present staff at 930 Westacre Road, "Why won't you give up your present mode of transit in favor of the present YoloBus service? And would your response change if bus stops with benches or shelters were in place there?"

Remember that cost of shelters need not be a factor, since many are being provided at Regional Transit's bus stops at no cost to the public! If Westacre Road is not busy enough to justify "commercial shelters," surely some existing shelters on West Capitol Avenue could be relocated to Westacre Road, with West Capitol Avenue receiving the commercial shelters as replacements. Again, why not restore bus stops at 930 Westacre Road? (In the shade of their trees, of course...)

WILLIAM A. LOWELL

Port's viability

Why am I not surprised to read the article on the front page of the News-Ledger (June 5, 1995) Port expects operating loss for the year?

If the port director and the commission get their way, we will keep pouring money into this business for as far as the eye can see, if this port has the potential that Mr. Sulpizio would have us believe I am convinced there are money lenders out there who would jump at the opportunity to lend this business the required finances it needs to bring it up to where it can be competitive with Stockton of it's share of business. If I sound like a broken record, it is the fact I don't think the taxpayers of Sacramento and East Yolo counties should be forced to shell out more taxes than we already have to keep a few jobs for a few people and profits for corporations like rice farmers timber industry railroads and shipping such as ocean going and trucking company's in business when we, the tax payers, don't benefit one dime for our investment in this $35-5,000.000 give away, if someone out there can show me where we are getting a fair shake on this. I am more than willing to lend an unbiased ear to it.

I know Director Sulpizio is a man who will not give up on what will benefit the port easily. From my experience with him, when I ask him for his cooperation in dealing with the problems we the people living in the cul d sacs along Stone Boulevard were being polluted with smoke and noise from the switching of cars in back of our

Justice needed

This is an open letter to the West Sacramento City Council:

I am Ernest Meier. I live on Davis Road in West Sacramento. In 1941, when World War II broke out, I was drafted into the military six weeks before Pearl Harbor. I served my country here at home in the states and also overseas in Italy. I was discharged in 1946. In 1947 I bought five acres on Davis Road and am still living at the same address, going on 49 years. I built my house on a 1/2 acre lot which was permissible all these years and still is once the water and sewer lines are installed.

But 48 years later the West Sacramento City Council comes along and says, "We are going to change all that, we are going to split your five acres into 2 1/2 acre lots, like it or not." So there goes me and my wife's shattered dreams down the drain, leaving nothing for our children and grandchildren to help them out getting started owning a home. There would only be one more house permissible on the balance of the 4 1/2 acre parcel, which to me don't make an ounce of sense. Nobody is going to build a 250,000.00 home on a 4 1/2 acre parcel when they have to face 1/2 acre lots across the street on the north side on Davis Road where the much cheaper homes would be built. I guarantee you, if any of the city council members lived out here on Davis Road, then it would be a different story entirely.

If the city council refuses not to go back to the old original plan to 1/2 acre zoning, I will take it up with Washington and Veterans of Foreign Wars and let's see what they have to say about this boondoggle.

I am a four-year World War II veteran and will not give up until justice is served.

Elections changed, mayor's term questioned

■ City council elections will be held in November of every even numbered year, with either two or three seats up for grabs each election

By Steve Marschke

Following changes in election scheduling by the Washington Unified School District, the West Sacramento City Council voted last month to change city council elections to November of every even-numbered year, in order to coincide with general elections.

The change will save the costs of a special election ($25,000) which would otherwise be necessary to allow all council vacancies to be filled at the same election during each cycle, said Mayor Cindy Tuttle. Without the change, the city would have had to fill its council vacancies either in two separate elections in March and June, or by paying for a special election.

Before the school board voted to change its election cycle to November, the two entities could have split the costs of a special election to consilidate their ballots.

By changing its election cycle to November, the council also lengthened the four-year terms of its five incumbents by five months. The seats occupied by Mayor Tuttle and fellow council members Bill Kristoff and Greg Potnick are the next ones up for ballot, and will now be scheduled for a vote in November of 1996 instead of June. The seats occupied by Roland Hensley and Wes Beers will not be subject to vote until November, 1998.

With the change, also reopened the question of how to choose the city's mayor -- a question the council has traditionally settled with a council vote at its first meeting of July, and which it will deal with tonight.

West Sacramento mayors have recently served one-year terms, rotated every July. The rotation allowed "new" councils seated following a June vote in alternate years to choose a mayor whose term is guaranteed. But if it continues this tradition, it could lead to confusion. The council could choose a mayor who is then voted out of office (or who declines to run) in the election five months after the choice is made.

Tuttle also said she hopes to "remove the politics" from the city's selection of mayor every year.

"Even though this city doesn't have a (publicly) elected mayor, there's that perceived 'power thing' of being mayor. There's too much politics" in the annual selection, she commented.

Tuttle said she would like the council to consider some kind of formal rotation of the seat. The council has not been consistent about its "informal" rotation of the mayor's gavel since the city formed in 1987.

In addition, for the first time in the port's history, two county supervisors were named to the commission early this year.

Sacramento County Supervisor Dave Cox and Yolo County Supervisor Mike McGowan both joined the port commission in the spring.

Sulpizio said the addition of elected officials to the commission indicates a heightened interest in port operations and that he expects more appointments of elected officials to follow.

While he believes some of the Grand Jury allegations to be "unfounded," particularly the implication that the port's financial standing is not carefully watched and reported, he said the welcomes the challenges the port is facing. "It tests our mettle more than ever, but I welcome the scrutiny," he said.

Yolo Grand Jury comments on West Sacto

The 1995-96 Yolo County Grand Jury report has been released, and discusses several West Sacramento issues:

■ The jury reported that weaknesses in the accounting practices used by the Washington Unified School District -- including control over student body funds -- are being addressed.

Payroll and auditing procedures have been instituted, and "no errors were reported by auditors last year."

A district bookkeeper pleaded "no contest" to charges of mishandling tens of thousands of dollars in student body money at River City High School two years ago.

■ The jury reported that the West Sacramento sewage treatment plant was improving its operations and that city manager Joe Goeden said he was expecting the plant to be in compliance by a state deadline last month.

The city had been fined $30,000 in 1987, $80,000 in 1989 and $250,000 in May 1994 for treatment violations. Violations included improperly treated sewage released into the river at times when the plant was "upset" by chemicals in the waste stream. The 1994 fines included charges of improper testing procedures at the plant.

The jury suggested that the next Yolo County jury look at compliance by other treatment plants in the county, and asked West Sacramento to verify that its plant has been brought into compliance.

City officials denied testing procedures were faulty at the plant when the information was brought out by the News-Ledger and other sources in 1993. Then-public works director Larry Gossett retired earlier this year.

■ Also in the report was an assessment of progress at the West Sacramento Police Department, which is now led by Chief Larry Gore.

Jury members interviewed 15 "randomly chosen employees" and specific management personnel, and concluded that "the new leadership team has responded positively in addressing the organizational problems of past years," but that "changes have caused some stress despite consensus that the new organization is better."

The report said interviews done in a 1992 report showed managers as "inflexible, arbitrary and inconsistent" under the leadership of then-police chief Barry Kalar.

Opening lead — king of diamonds.

You might wonder how South managed to make four hearts on this deal. It seems he must go down one, even if you look at all four hands. But make it he did, and it all came about in a logical fashion.

West started with the K-A-Q of diamonds and shifted to a trump. Ordinarily, declarer would win with the ace, draw trumps and play the A-8 of clubs, planning to finesse the jack and land the contract if the finesse succeeded.

But South realized that if he did this, he would surely be defeated. He recognized that West would not have passed as dealer had he held a five- (or six-) card spade suit headed by at least one honor, the A-K-Q of diamonds he had already shown up with, and the queen of clubs as well.

Since the club finesse was therefore bound to lose, South decided to adopt a different line of play that offered a legitimate chance for the contract. Accordingly, he won the trump return with the ace, led a low trump to dummy and returned the jack of clubs!

East covered with the queen, taken by South with the ace. Declarer now drew trumps and led the eight of clubs to West's nine and dummy's king. Next came the seven of clubs from dummy and poor East, holding the 10-5-3 over the 7-6, was a dead duck whether he covered or not. Either way, declarer could dispose of his spade loser on one of dummy's clubs.

It is true that South needed to find West with the 10-x or 9-x of clubs for his plan to succeed, but he had the kind of luck that is so often associated with good card play. One sometimes has to abandon a normal line of play because it is certain to fail, and instead substitute an approach that offers at least some chance of success.
